

CHALLENGE

STRATEGIES

PROGRAMME OUTCOMES

IMPACT

Limited access to funding and capacity development opportunities for new/emerging CSOs

Lack of clarity on how the new civil society law can be implemented

Underrepresentation and limited role of civil society in reform and democratization processes

Provide

Innovative, flexible and context specific capacity strengthening support and funding for new/emerging CSOs working on media, gender, justice and human rights

Support

research and learning, dialogue, advocacy and relationship building

among CSOs and between CSOs and government actors

New and emerging CSOs (including women and youth-led) capable of managing projects and playing their democratic and human rights roles more effectively

Enhanced culture of dialogue and advocacy with government on issues that matter to citizens and CSOs (such as civic space, human rights, gender, good governance, inclusive democracy)

Learning and growth within CSIF and beyond

A nurturing civic space with better representation of marginalized groups and stronger role and voice of new and emerging CSOs in government/civil society decision making spaces

A more diverse and pluralistic civil society sector which is effectively protecting civic space, influencing policy and amplifying citizens' voices and rights
